Nature is Calling .... A book for all generations. A journey through nature.....and the imagination. A children's book created to engage the readers as they explore nature with each turn of the page. Through observation and gentle prompting, the readers will quickly "get lost" outside -- by a pond, a river, in a field, or on a mountainside.

The visual detail, color, and settings will captivate readers from one to 100 as they encounter animals, birds, and fish, drawn by naturalist and illustrator Gary Jones, and shown in their natural environment. A timeless journey..... a forever memory!

About the Creators

Gary Jones is a well-known wildlife artist. In addition to being held in distinguished private collections, his commissioned art has been the centennial and bicentennial centerpieces for both private businesses and nonprofit organizations.

Of Chickasaw descent, Jones' unique gift for reverently capturing the detailed spiritual and physical nature of his subjects is a signature element of his style. Today, the 79-year-old artist lives and sketches in the Big Sky country of Montana enjoying the very nature for which he has such an intimate personal and artistic relationship. He shares his inherent "call to nature" with his children, grandchildren, and fly fishing friends.

Martha Joh Reeder, an educator, businesswoman, author and mom was inspired to write this book to encourage her grandchildren to explore and engage in nature. A professor of sustainable business practices and lover of nature, she has a deep understanding that connecting with nature is not just healthy for the individual, it is essential for protecting our natural resources and our world.
